Acknowledgements

Seattle International Foundation is grateful to the funders who contributed to this second edition of the Central America Philanthropy Guide by sharing their 2016 grantee information, and to the grantee NGOs for facilitating communications with their donors. To those funders who contributed to the first edition of the Guide in 2016 and provided valuable feedback, we will continue to make the Guide a more refined and useful tool. We are also thankful for the 2016 grants data provided to us by our partners at Foundation Center. Finally, we must recognize our dedicated Research Fellow, Alfonso Montero and Project Lead, Olga Vnodchenko for their leadership and commitment in making this second edition possible.

ABOUT THE GUIDE

Introduction

The Central America Philanthropy Guide is an evolving resource to help philanthropists and donors understand the funding landscape in Central America by highlighting grant-making from public and private institutional donors from around the world. The Guide is meant to encourage greater conversation and collaboration between funders, as well as strengthen civil society in the region.

This second edition of the Guide contains information on grants made in 2016 to over 300 unique NGOs based in Central America. The data represent over $74 million in grants made to the region by 61 institutional donors.

The Guide includes information on grants made directly to locally-based NGOs in Central America, and it is categorized by country, issue, grantees, and funders who have presence in the region. This edition of the Guide is complemented by Tableau data visualization, which allows users to further explore the information.

Seattle International Foundation (SIF) conducted and commissioned all of the research for this publication. The Guide is released at the Central America Donors Forum, a SIF initiative, as an additional resource that can connect funders to one another based on mutual interests and priorities. The Forum convenes leaders from business, philanthropy, government, and civil society to discuss priority issues, learn about successful models of development, and explore co-investment for social impact. Please visit www.cadonorsforum.org to learn more about the Forum and the Guide.

Research

SIF identified the need for more detailed funding information by way of two reports on philanthropy in Latin America that we commissioned within the past four years. In 2015, SIF partnered with Foundation Center to publish U.S. Foundation Funding to Latin & Central America, a report based on Foundation Center's data, which included all grants of $10,000 or more made in 2013 by 1,000 of the largest U.S. foundations. This data set accounted for approximately half of all grant dollars awarded to nonprofits by independent, corporate, community, and operating foundations in the United States.¹

That research indicated 242 foundations awarded 1,846 grants totaling $605.5 million for Latin America in 2013. These grants were allocated to 1,120 organizations working both in and outside of the region, but with programs that target Latin America. Twenty-eight percent of all grant dollars ($171.5 million) awarded to Latin America went directly to 573 organizations in Latin American countries. The majority (72 percent) of funding for Latin America, totaling $434 million, was awarded to international organizations located outside the region. These grants supported programs that benefit specific Latin American countries, as well as global initiatives that include Latin America as a region.

To understand funding specific to Central America, SIF partnered with Foundation Center a second time to create a one-page study, U.S. Foundation Funding for Central America in Context, using the same dataset as the previous report. Findings showed that in 2013, 104 foundations awarded 367 grants, totaling $68 million, to organizations located in Central America, as well as international organizations based outside the region.

Trends: Figure 1 shows funding related to and for Central America, meaning grants made to recipients located in Central America, the U.S.

¹The data did not include grants by smaller foundations; government entities; gifts by corporate giving programs or public charities; any awards made directly to individuals; grants paid by private foundations to U.S. community foundations (to avoid double counting dollars); and loans or program-related investments.

ABOUT THE GUIDE

and elsewhere, when the stated purpose of the grant correlates to Central America. The funding peaks in years 2009, 2011, and 2012 are due to significant scholarship grants made by the Walton Family Foundation. If we remove just those gifts alone, funding to the region is more static, ranging from $18 million to $68 million over the 11-year period.

Figure 2 shows funding by U.S. foundations for international causes in general.² Sixty-eight million dollars in grants for Central America is 1.1 percent of $6.4 billion, the total amount of U.S. foundation funding for international causes in 2013. Of the $6.4 billion, U.S. foundations gave $2.5 billion directly to organizations outside the U.S. in 2013, however, only 0.5 percent of these funds, or $13 million, went directly to organizations in Central America.

Given this relatively small amount of direct funding to local organizations in Central America, SIF created the inaugural 2016 Central America Philanthropy Guide to find and highlight funders who give directly to Central American NGOs.

Figure 2. Funding by U.S. foundations for international causes totaled $6.4 billion in 2013, of which only $2.5 billion went directly to organizations working outside the U.S.

1.1% of the $6.4B in funding was for Central America; $2.5B of the $6.4B was to organizations outside of the US, $13M of which, or 0.5%, went to Central America.

*Latin America data exclude grants to Central America, which appears separately.

Methodology

The Guide includes funders from Canada, Central America, Europe, Mexico, and the United States. For the purposes of the Guide, SIF defines a locally-based NGO as an organization that is founded, based, and working in Central America.

Outreach & Data Collection: SIF collected twice the amount of grant data for this edition than it did for the first edition. Also included in this year's publication are grants data from 21 additional funders provided by Foundation Center, based on its Foundation Maps database of all publishable grants, foundation administered programs, and program-related investments.³ The Guide excludes grants, fellowships, awards made directly to individuals or anonymous recipients, gifts by corporate giving programs, and loans.

Many funders rely on intermediaries to facilitate their international grant-making. The Guide lists funders according to grants made directly to local NGOs. Information about primary grant-making institutions is not included. SIF recognizes that some international funders with significant grant-making presence in Central America work through intermediaries; we are exploring ways to map this added level of data in the next edition of the Guide.

Grantee Descriptions & Issue Areas: The Guide is organized into three parts: Part I lists grantees by country and 14 issue areas, Part II lists funders alphabetically accompanied by their grantee information, and Part III lists grantees in alphabetical order.

Grantees are listed by the official name of the organization (most in Spanish) with a brief description (e.g. scope, target population, and/or issue area). The descriptions were sourced from a combination of information from ² Funding to a region may not be entirely for that region. For example, some of the funding to organizations in Western Europe may be directed to causes in Africa or Asia.

grantee websites and information provided by the funders. Although many grantees address multiple issue areas, the Guide lists grantees under the issue area that best describes their primary area of work.

Grant Amounts and Confidentiality: Central America is undergoing rapid development within the context of tremendous security concerns that many grantees experience daily. A small number of funders asked that aspects of their grant-making data not be included in the Guide to protect grantees in dangerous situations. To stay consistent with our own criteria, and respect grantees' safety, SIF did not include any grants for which funders did not want all criteria published.

Some grantees received more than one grant from the same funder in 2016; these grants are rolled up into one sum. Finally, the Guide includes all grants made in 2016, regardless of the length of the grant period.

Conclusion

We invite funders working in Central America to support future editions of the Central America Philanthropy Guide by sharing their grant-making information and feedback. For more information about the Guide, or to be included in the third edition, please contact Olga Vnodchenko at olga@seaif.org.

Thank you.
